Dear Secretary,

- The Australian Natural History Medallion is awarded annually in recognition of services to Australian natural history. It is administered by the Field Naturalists Club of Victoria Inc.
- Any person shall be eligible for the Award who, within the preceding ten years, has increased popular and/or scientific knowledge of Australian natural history (biological or physical). Such a person may have:
  - assisted notably in the protection and understanding of Australian native flora and/or fauna; discovered and and/or described new Australian species of plants or animals; devoted considerable time and care to the study of any branch of Australian natural history, including palaeontology and geology, and the dissemination of knowledge through the publication of articles or books or by photography or pictorial art or any other means accepted by the Award Committee. (NB. Information pertaining to the nominee's activities prior to the preceding ten years may be included in the nomination if the nominating Society judge it to be pertinent.)
- Nominations for the Award may be submitted by natural history societies. They stand for three years. (It is not necessary that the Society be represented on the General Committee.)
- A General Committee, composed of representatives from natural history clubs or associations, elects the Award Committee and handles all other business of the Medallion. Any natural history society may apply for membership of this committee which meets annually. Meetings are held in Melbourne.
